EVENT SUMMARY

DS ADC 2201

Sterilization is the process that destroys all types and forms of micro-organisms including viruses, bacteria, fungi and bacterial endospores. Major methods of sterilization include the use of steam under pressure (steam autoclave), dry heat and unsaturated chemical vapour. Disinfection is generally less lethal to pathogenic organisms than sterilization. Three levels of disinfection have been differentiated, depending on the type and form of micro-organisms destroyed. The effectiveness of any disinfection procedure is influenced by several factors, including the type and number of micro-organisms present, the concentration and length of exposure to the disinfecting agent and the amount of organic matter or other debris present on the item being disinfected.
